

Chairman Powell's rush to vote on media consolidation is undermining the democratic process. We need public hearings and debate on the concentration of ownership of the broadcast media into a few powerful hands. Such rule changes will dry up competition and diversity among our primary information sources and possibly eliminate local TV and radio programming altogether. The airwaves belong to the American public, not to a few private interests.